The partners have been very busy over the last few months undertaking research on educational courses available in the European countries of the partnership and holding validation workshops with stakeholders to assess the draft version of the training programme on Sustainability and Digitization in the Tourism Industry.

The findings reveal a common need for training content that addresses the specific themes of sustainability and digitization as local businesses are exposed to the challenges of digital transformation and sustainable adaptation and need support. In fact, tourism SMEs are worried about the strong competition and their own competitiveness capacities. They are aware of the digital transformation of the tourism sector and they need support to adapt. They know that sustainable performance is important but are not sensitized enough to deploy operational policies to facilitate it.
